

Bindoola Bush Camp – Home Valley Station, Australia 2008

Being Perfect Where You're At

BEING:

The state of wholeness. The state of being complete. You don't have to be perfect to feel this way. You just have to be who you are in your most imperfection and your perfection. Don't forget, in that equation your best imperfection is part of your wholeness. A state of knowing that no matter who you are, you can be complete. No matter where you're incomplete or where you're ignorant, or what you don't know, you can still be complete.

So it's not what you don't know, at this moment, it's what you do know. Because you can find a place where you can be whole and complete with the stars, complete with yourself, complete with the etheric, complete with the physical, complete with oneself. And be All in that complete state.

How do you manifest this physically in your everyday life? It doesn't mean you never know fear. It doesn't mean you never know anger, or you always know joy. It doesn't mean that you always have to be happy, or you can never be tired or grumpy anymore. It means that it's all those things. That even in your state of grumpiness, you can be whole, you can be complete. You don't have to give up a part of yourself because you feel wrong.

Staying whole means that you stay whole no matter what the circumstances, no matter what's going on in your life, that's where you use a great deal of caring for yourself and others. The wholeness has nothing to do with how you are feeling. It has a great deal to do with what you're doing with those feelings.

So being whole is not about always being in a perfect high. It's about being just perfect where you're at. There's a depth of character, there's a depth of person when you can touch that level of honesty and touch that level of caring.

© Donna Sarah Taylor